Third-Party Libraries

DSpace uses third-party libraries which may be distributed under different licenses to the above. Information about these licenses is detailed in the LICENSES\_THIRD\_PARTY file at the root of the source tree. While we attempt to only use third-party libraries that are released under BSD-compatible licenses, you must agree to the terms of these licenses, in addition to the above DSpace source code license, in order to use this software.

DSpace Licensing Notice

Fedora Commons joined with the DSpace Foundation and began operating under the new name DuraSpace in July 2009. DuraSpace holds the copyrights of the DSpace Foundation, Inc.

The DSpace Foundation, Inc. was a 501(c)3 corporation established in July 2007 with a mission to promote and advance the dspace platform enabling management, access and preservation of digital works. The Foundation was able to transfer the legal copyright from Hewlett-Packard Company (HP) and Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) to the DSpace Foundation in October 2007. Many of the files in the source code may contain a copyright statement stating HP and MIT possess the copyright, in these instances please note that the copyright has transferred to the DSpace foundation, and subsequently to Duraspace.
